

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing this letter in an effort to save the Indiana No Call Law. Before the law went into effect, years before the Federal No Call Law was passed, we received unwanted solicitations from commercial firms hired to sell the wares and/or services of all imaginable businesses. We received at least two calls per day, usually after we had satr down for dinner.

The calling companies are now out of business. The effective enforcement of the law by Indiana authorities has shut down the privacy invaders. Indiana's idea was so well received that the entire nation can now benefit from much of the protection we receive. However some calls are permitted under the Federal law that we in Indiana do not want.

Now my bank wants to be able to call me to hawk their products and services. I have already established a relationship with them, but apparently that is no acceptable, so they are spending big bucks to sue Indiana. I have already advised my bank that if they are successful in altering Indiana's No Call law, I will take my business elsewhere to a Credit Union or local bank that will pledge not to call me.

You can end this insanity by dismissing the actions against Indiana. Please do so.

Robert Stackhouse